Family Games Database

The Family Video Game Database is there to help parents choose games appropriate for purpose during lockdown.

As a result of lockdown procedures being in place in many countries, more people than ever are accessing video games - many of which are children and families. Ukie, the trade body for the UK interactive entertainment industry, alongside Ask About Games, which provides games guidance for parents, have created the Family Video Game Database. The site features over 300 games, each featuring an extensive description of the game, its PEGI age rating, whether it contains in game purchases and links to other similar games.
