Goethe-Institut | Kultursymposium Weimar

Kultursymposium is returning in Weimar, Germany for three exciting days with the title A Matter of Trust, bringing together artists and creatives from across the world.

The Kultursymposium is returning to Weimar under the title »A Matter of Trust«! From 10th to 12th of May, the Goethe-Institut will be bringing together exciting personalities from across the globe to exchange ideas about the multifaceted topic of trust in debates, presentations, workshops and artistic works over the course of three days.

Trust plays a central role in many areas of life, both as an individual emotional category and as a fundamental social resource: as trust in our fellow humans, in private and business relationships, trust in political systems, media and science, in legal systems and international agreements, as trust in cultural codes, new technology and currencies – and last but not least, as trust in ourselves.

In a world in which past conflicts are re-emerging with unanticipated vehemence and contradictory information shapes our everyday media, trust is of elementary importance. Trust enables decision-making and taking action in complex situations, in which not all details can be researched and not every risk precisely assessed. At the Kultursymposium Weimar the role and effects of trust on our social interactions will be discussed from a global perspective in order to negotiate joint paths to make trust possible in a fragile world.
