

All CCS and Cross-sectoral Working Conditions

MEPs Back Plans to Improve Conditions for EU Artists

Members of the European Parliament have voted in favor of new rules aiming to enhance protections for creative professionals across the bloc

SPECIAL COVERAGE - CREATIVES UNITE

The Creatives Unite platform features stories and interviews with artists, culture, and creative professionals from various countries in the EU. The platform highlights the shared challenges they face and how mobility, cooperation, and integration can strengthen cultural, artistic, and creative production.

REPORT: A new study takes a deep dive into the status and working conditions of Artists & Creative Professionals

Interview: The Ukrainian opera teacher who uses a gaming application to teach music remotely

News Story: MEPs push for improved rights and protections for artists across the EU

Interview: Mobile networks are a lifeline for the co-working community of Ukraine

Op-Ed: Social Europe | An EU framework for artists' working conditions, finally?

Interview: Working on the edge of Art and scientific research requires social security

REPORT: Artistic freedom in times of polycrises

News Story: MEPs Back Plans to Improve Conditions for EU Artists

MEPs adopted proposals put forward by the Culture and Employment Committees at the European Parliament. The initiatives include measures to help artists when licensing their

work to large non-EU streaming services, like Netflix, Disney+, Amazon Prime, and others.

“The level of precariousness in the sector has been dire for years, but the COVID-19 crisis has shown that the situation for CCS (culture and creative sectors) professionals is simply unsustainable,” said the co-rapporteur of the Culture and Education Committee Domenec Ruiz Devesa.

One key aspect is addressing the controversial use of “buy-out” contracts by platforms like Netflix and Amazon Prime. These deals see artists sign over long-term copyrights for a single payment, depriving them of ongoing royalties from their work.

The legislation will ban such provisions within Europe in a bid to ensure fair compensation for creators. It comes as streaming has boomed in popularity but working models in the sector remain highly precarious for many.

The COVID-19 pandemic further exposed the financial vulnerabilities artists face. Campaigners argue existing structures leave cultural workers open to exploitation through short-term contracts and the threat of replacement by AI.

The proposed directive echoes demands made by striking Hollywood unions seeking better pay and conditions. Film and TV writers have reached a new deal, but actors remain on picket lines after 100 days.

Supporters say the EU initiative could significantly improve job security and pay for the creative industries bloc-wide. However, final approval is still needed in a November vote at the European Parliament in Strasbourg.

If passed, it has the potential to reshape standards for cultural professionals across the continent in the digital era. However, challenges remain around enforcement if services operate outside of EU jurisdiction.

- Read the Press Release: here