Yep! Moldova together with their partners in Ukraine have launched a tool to get together all the Ukrainian community around the world and connect them with qualified specialists, which would help them to overcome the war crisis more easily and find the strength to move forward. ACLab (Anticrisis Lab) is a platform that helps Ukrainians overcome the first effects of war.

Currently, the platform focuses on 3 initiatives: - School - organizing online lessons for children of all ages; - Psychological counseling - professional support for overcoming the deadlock situations generated by the war; - Volunteering - involvement in community activities. Parents can register their children for online lessons taught by teachers from Ukraine according to their regular school curriculum, while keeping in touch with their colleagues and communicating in their mother tongue. Those in need of psychological counseling will be connected with Ukrainian-speaking psychologists.

They are currently looking for:

- School teachers, who speak Ukrainian, ready to give online lessons for children of all ages;
- Ukrainian-speaking psychologists to support refugees;
- Volunteers in the Yep team, who would help coordinate operational issues.

Anyone wishing to help is also welcome to register here:
