What Is This About?

NEMO's European Museum Conference programme is finally here! 'Who cares? Museums, wellbeing, and resilience' will explore the transformative role of museums in supporting mental health, wellbeing, and community resilience. As museums increasingly embrace their potential as spaces for emotional healing, social connection, and therapeutic experiences, the European museum conference will highlight inspiring case studies and innovative approaches that position museums as active contributors to public health.

The 3-day Conference will examine how partnerships between the cultural and healthcare sectors are shaping new approaches, reflecting a broader movement to integrate arts and culture into health initiatives, fuelled by growing recognition of the positive impact creative environments can have on mental wellbeing. The conference will also discuss the role of museums in supporting youth mental health, and address the importance of self-care and resilience within the museum sector itself.

- Inspiring case studies and expert talks
- Cross-sector conversations between culture and health
- Panels and workshops on mental health, youth engagement, and museum staff wellbeing
- Networking with museum leaders and health sector innovators
